Ping Nakara

Boutique Hotel & Spa

In the early 1900s, Chiang Mai was at the centre of a thriving teak industry. Foreign managers oversaw logging concessions throughout the forests of Northern Thailand. With the help of local labour and hardy elephants, they performed their arduous and dangerous work, extracting teak logs and floating them downstream for grading and sale. Today the teak wallahs are gone. But the river and forestry station remain, and the relaxed ambience of Chiang Mai city is just as enticing as ever.

The Ping Nakara takes inspiration from these times past with an intimate hotel built in elegant colonial style of the period. ♦
